Giddings Announces Lectures On Early American Indians

J. Louis Giddings, director of Brown University's Haffenreffer Museum of the American Indian at Mount Hope, Bristol, R. I., has announced a series of lectures on subjects pertaining to Indian culture. The lecture series will be given at the museum during the next three months for the public and private school children of Rhode Island and nearby Massachusetts.

The lecture series is planned primarily for pupils of the seventh, eighth, and ninth grades but will be adaptable for other age groups. Public school superintendents and heads of private and parochial schools of the area have been invited, by the museum, to send groups of students to the lectures. These lectures will be given on Tuesday mornings at eleven o'clock.

Private and public schools sent large numbers of students to a similar group of talks last year. Question periods and tours of the museum will add to the value of the talks. Stephen L. Dyson '59, a student assistant, will assist Giddings in the preparation and delivery of the lectures.

The first lecture of the series will be titled, "Native and Settler in Old New England." It will describe the Indians as found by the first settlers, the first settlers as found by the Indians, and the relations between the two groups; this lecture will be given on October seventh and repeated on November eighteenth.

Giddings recently returned from a summer spent in Alaska where he continued archeological research which he had previously carried on in the Arctic.

Williams to Speak On Negro Housing

James N. Williams, the Executive Director of the Urban League of Rhode Island, will speak at the Resident Fellows' luncheon today in the President's Dining Room.

In his talk, "Racial Discrimination in Rhode Island", Williams will explain the problem of how to move the Negroes out of their present houses and integrate them into new housing developments, despite the present racial discrimination that exists in Rhode Island. Williams said that the housing situation is the cause of most of the tension and conflict that exists between the races in the state. The Negro is the most poorly housed group in the state and he will explain some of the factors contributing to this situation.

He will also talk on the future of the Negro on the College Hill area and the plans that are being made to provide better developments in the various Negro sections about the city.

University In Chemistry

Barnaby C. Keeney, president of the University, recently announced the appointment of five new members of the faculty. Two have been added to the Chemistry Department and three to the Engineering Department.

The Chemistry Department additions are Joseph F. Bunnett, associate professor of chemistry, Jan A. A. Ketelaar, visiting professor of chemistry. The engineering additions are Patrick A. Burton Paul, and Hans Thommen, all assistant professors.

Bunnett is a 1942 graduate of Reed College and received his Ph. D. degree from the University of Rochester in 1945. Before coming to Brown, he taught at and at the University of Carolina.
